

I am very disappointed that people are trying to limit the content of my satellite radio service. I am paying for this service in the same manner that I am paying for cable TV. Should we be getting in touch with CNN to tell them to stop including weather forecasts for the entire country because that information is the personal property of the networks?

Should we help to protect the local broadcasters from competition when they often choose to tailor their content and services to their advertisers and not listen to the consumers?

If I am paying for the service, please let it be between me and the supplier, and not a federal regulation issue.

Hopefully no one will find out that I am making local calls with my cell phone and competing with the local phone provider.
